

Recovery Capitals

Recovery capitals are five different types of support that can help with recovery from substance use disorder (SUD).

Social recovery capital

- People (family, friends, co-workers, healthcare providers, neighbors, etc.) who support your recovery
 - A social network of like-minded sober individuals who are also in recovery

Physical recovery capital

- Safe housing, reliable transportation, or access to healthy food -- things that meet your basic needs

Cultural recovery capital

- Your recovery process is actively supported with culturally-based or culturally-relevant care
- Tribal nations and communities are leaders in harnessing the power of cultural traditions to support recovery

Community recovery capital

- Places in your community that can help with recovery like residential and outpatient SUD treatment facilities, behavioral health clinics, and prescribers of medication-assisted treatment
 - Community events that are explicitly drug and alcohol free, or specifically for people in recovery

Human recovery capital

- Your unique knowledge, training or education, and lived experiences that help you on your path to recovery
